The 4Cs settles into its new home

LANCE CROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

A gorgeous autumn sun cast a golden light onto the 4Cs building for its official opening last Friday evening. With the sun setting, about 80 people gathered at the building's entrance – all garnished in brightly-coloured balloons – to witness the long awaited ribbon cutting.

"Can you imagine what our excitement and anticipation is right now moving into this new building," said 4Cs chairperson Ave Petch. "I believe this proves, once again, that we all live in a caring, loving community, and I say hooray for the people of Haliburton!"

The 4Cs – Christian Community Concern Centre – provides food and affordable clothing for the less fortunate.

Petch took the opportunity to thank Sir Sanford Fleming students for the building's environmentally-sound design, as well as the contributions from local businesses, schools, and churches. She reminded the crowd that the agency has never received a government grant, instead relying on the kindness of volunteers and local-based initiatives. Gratitude was also expressed to the council of Dysart et al for obtaining and maintaining a rent-free building to work from. It was Dysart Reeve Murray Fearrey, who along with the 4Cs' Irene Roberts-McGuire who would eventually cut the taut orange ribbon that straddled the entrance.

The Haliburton Rotary Club was on hand with a surprise donation of $5,000. Rotary member Jim Henwood said the donation was recognition of the important role the 4Cs plays in the community.

"It'll also eventually become almost a tourist attraction because of the uniqueness of it, and Lord knows we could use some extra business downtown," said the main street variety store owner to a wave of laughter.

Another $5,000 cheque was bestowed to the building on behalf of St. George's Anglican Church. The Reverend Faun Harriman called it a "love offering".

Alicia Ross tragedy comes close to Highlands

Coboconk area residents remain in shock after police found Wednesday what they believe are a murdered Markham woman's remains northeast of the village and another site south of Manilla.

"It's getting too close," said Don Spences.

He and his wife Marie learned what happened Thursday morning when they opened up a Toronto newspaper at a local coffee shop.

The couple didn't expect the high-profile investigation into Alicia Ross' disappearance to lead to the City of Kawartha Lakes.

The search for Alician Ross's body parts led to what's believed to be her accused murderer's family cottage.

His wife Marie said "it's kind of hard to believe."

"It (appears it) was her own neighbour ... that's something else," she said.

Daniel Sylvester, 31, is charged with second-degree murder in connection with the death of Ross. The 25-year-old and her family lived next to Sylvester.

He had turned himself into police in Newmarket late Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by his lawyer. Police said the remains were then located.

Official confirmation on the identity of the remains had not been made at press time and the investigation is continuing.

For much of Wednesday, Ontario Chief Coroner Barry McLellan and York Regional Police Service forensic identification staff examined the remains found in two separate locations that are about 45 kilometres apart. The first site was a grassy ditch south of Concession 7 at Cruisers collide

Two police car cruisers collided last Wednesday afternoon just before 3 p.m. under circumstances investigators are still trying to ascertain. The incident occurred just north of Rebel's Lane on Hwy. 35 (about 10 km north of Carnarvon). The two officers involved in the crash, Constables Rob Adams and Dave Neville were both brought to the hospital with minor injuries. Staff Sergeant Bob Walli called it "an unusual occurrence".

Haliburton's anti-smoking efforts pave the way for a province-wide ban

LANCROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

The province's patchwork of municipal no-smoking bylaws helped pave the way for the Smoke-Free Ontario Act, says the Health Unit's tobacco control officer.

Kris Kadwell spoke enthusiastically about the new legislation, which comes into effect in May of 2006, at last Thursday's Board of Health meeting in Haliburton.

"A lot of people say that this provincial legislation means it was a waste of time for all these municipalities to have created their own bylaws," said Kadwell. "I disagree with that because it helped change people's attitudes."

Kadwell has been working for the health unit for 23 years, the past seven of which in tobacco control. He cited house parties as a good barometer for this mental change: smokers often automatically go outside to smoke without being asked to. Many municipalities throughout the province have banned smoking from their restaurants and bars over the past few years. Townships, such as Dysart et al and Minden Hills still allow smoking in such places but have long since banned it from its facilities.

But even within more liberal townships, local businesses have taken up the slack on their own accord. Kadwell cites Haliburton as an example of this. Twelve restaurants went smoke-free as a result of pressure from their constituents. Recently, even the bottom level at McKecks sports bar went smoke-free.

It's all part of what Kadwell describes as the "denormalization" of smoking.

"It's not the intent to make [smokers] feel they have leprosy or anything like that," said Kadwell. "But what it does do is make people cognizant that smoking is harmful to other people."

The Smoke-Free Ontario Act, also known as Bill 164, was passed at Queen's Park in June and creates an even playing field across the province. The law will restrict smoking in all work and public places and toughens laws on the sale of tobacco.

Government officials have learned their lessons from early municipal bylaw attempts, where enforcement agents pursued patrons who knew the officers didn't have the legal right to ask for their I.D.. Under the provincial rules, owners will be accountable for violations on their premises.

"We got a lot of bruises and cuts from creating these bylaws but we've learned from them and changed them to reflect easier enforcement, implementation, and prosecution."

In 2008, an additional stipulation to the act will be phased in whereby corner stores will no longer be permitted to stage "powerwalls", where cigarettes figure prominently behind the cash. In this new landscape, says Kadwell, corner store owners will be far more accountable for employees who sell to minors. Also, to help mitigate legal technicalities when it comes to prosecution, retailers must ask anyone who looks under 25 for their identification.

District has tiny percentage of crows with West Nile

LANCROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

Haliburton County had one American crow identified with the West Nile virus this past summer, said Debbie Johnston, a public health inspector for the HKPR Health Unit. The crow was found in the Minden area in late August.

Johnston revealed her findings during a presentation at the board of health meeting in Haliburton last Thursday, in which she updated its members on the 2005 West Nile Program. Two other American crows in the district were also found positive: one in Cobourg and one in Lindsay.

"I believe that in the province there was 285 birds submitted that were confirmed positive. We had three of those," Johnston said.

The health unit's program focused its efforts on dead bird collection and mosquito trapping. The primary birds of interest were blue jays and crows, two species that have proven most vulnerable to the virus.

Health officials would have also accepted dead hawks for analysis but none were submitted. No other "unusual" species, such as squirrels or chipmunks, were sent for testing this summer.

During the summer months a total of 37 birds were sent to the health unit for analysis: 11 each from both Haliburton County and Kawartha Lakes and 15 from Northumberland.

As in past years, this summer's program began in May and was aided by the work of summer students. Three university students - one each in Haliburton, Lindsay, and Port Hope - covered the entire geographical area of the health unit, completing all the mosquito trapping and dead bird pick-up.

While dead birds are a symptom that West Nile may be residing in the area, the mosquito traps are more definitive proof as to the origin of the virus.

"The problem with the positive birds is that they are migratory. The scene of the death may not be the exact spot where the virus was transmitted," said Johnston.

Fifteen mosquito traps were set up between Haliburton County and Kawartha Lakes this past summer. The virus was not found in any of the insect traps until recently, when two tests turned out positive in Lindsay at the end of August.

The Health Unit launched an aggressive public education campaign this past summer: distributing information packages to the various municipalities, buying radio time, as well as holding a handful of PowerPoint presentations for the public. Municipalities were also equipped with a map that laid out potential mosquito breeding sites. The education campaign was primarily targeted people over 55 years of age, as research indicates they are most susceptible to the virus.

Health inspector Debbie Johnston gave Health Unit board members the heads up about this past summer's West Nile program.

Simcoe Street south of Manilla, just over the City of Kawartha Lakes-Durham Region border in Brock Township. The second location is on a private dirt road leading into Green Bay Estates, an isolated cottage community at Hugill Road and Weldon Drive on Four Mile Lake's west side in the former Somerville Township. The name 'Sylvester' was one of many posted near the steel-gated entrance to the cottages.

The accused was remanded into custody at a bail hearing in Richmond Hill Wednesday until a court appearance Thursday. At that time, he was remanded into custody again and will make a video court appearance Oct. 26.

If convicted, Sylvester faces a life sentence of 25 years with no chance of parole for 10 years.

His lawyer told the media Sylvester felt "great remorse" and is "prepared to let the law take its course."

In Coboconk, John Collerane and Robert Coss spoke of the case with the Lindsay Daily Post over a coffee Thursday afternoon. Collerane said he's never heard of anything like it in the 50 years he has been coming to his camp just west of Coboconk.

"To hear somebody would do that . . . it's mind boggling," he said, speaking of what might have been done to Ross.

"It's just a shock," Coss said. "Why would somebody do something like that?"

Collerane said the whole thing must be quite a shock for those who live nearby.

Extendicare volunteers treated to festive luau in praise of their efforts

LANCE CROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

You could almost hear the sound of Polynesian waves tracing the shoreline with its foam during last Tuesday night's dinner at the Haliburton Legion. The Hawaiian-themed evening, elaborately staged by Extendicare in honour of its nursing home volunteers, saw 150 people turn up to the annual celebration.

Resident program manager Barbara Menzies, with her straight black hair crowned in a garland of flowers, set the tone early in the evening as she greeted each of the guests with a rainbow-coloured lei.

Elvis Presley's immortal ballad "Can't Help Falling in Love", from his 1961 film Blue Hawaii, was performed in the background by Gord McRae as both residents and volunteers were served a buffet feast. The evening's menu further embellished the South Pacific theme: a full-sized pig that had been slowly spinning over a fire for the past six hours, chicken breasts with a zesty orange sauce, and for dessert, a pineapple and coconut cream pie.

The walls of the Legion were completely encompassed in beachfront wallpaper. Hovering over the hall were tinsel palm trees, while colourful cardboard ukuleles served as table ornaments.

Sue Pearl-Agar, Extendicare's regional director, praised the volunteers for their valuable contribution and said Haliburton set the standard for other nursing homes in the country.

"You turn bricks and mortar into a warm and welcoming home," Pearl-Agar told the volunteers.

Special recognition was given to Robert Burns for his extraordinary fundraising efforts. Burns collected Hendrik Van Nood, Mary Packard, and Robert Burns were all honoured for their respective contributions to Extendicare.

$1,200 for this year's wheelchair rally, which accounts for over half of the event's total proceeds. Extendicare also paid special tribute to Hendrik Van Nood for his all-around helpfulness and Mary Packard for her 30 years of volunteer service.

Volunteer Barbara Fawcett spoke about how the rewards of working at the nursing home can be summed up in the joy written on the faces of residents.

"To the residents, I thank you for allowing us to come into your home and to become part of your family," said Fawcett.

Perhaps the most eloquent speech of the night came from Extendicare resident Hildegard Sergeant. In a barely audible voice, Sergeant ruminated about the value of the service provided by volunteers.

"The hours you contribute to our lives mean a great deal to us," said Sergeant. "It doesn't matter if you come once a month or every day, each precious moment counts. You enrich our lives and for that we thank you."

Bring back the CBC

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE a lock-out to remind you of all the things you like about the CBC. And what is best about the CBC is its radio programming.

No other radio station or broadcaster can deliver the breadth of news reporting and public interest programs that the CBC can. You can listen to all the wire service headlines on the other radio stations – who don't invest money in actually sending reporters to cover events – but it's like eating only at a Chinese buffet: You're full at first but an hour later you need more nourishment. Something solid and good for you.

In the words of Marshall McLuhan, radio is a hot medium. Even though you can be doing something else while listening to the radio, such as driving your car or cooking dinner, it engages your mind. You have to actively listen, and, in listening, create your own images in your mind. Stories are told using words alone so you don't need to be watching your television screen to get a sense of what's going on.

Of course, during the six-week CBC lock-out there have been other sources of news available, but none are like radio. None can fit so seamlessly into the rest of your life.

This may seem like an Ottawa or Toronto issue, but by the very nature of the CBC, the lock-out is also very much a Haliburton issue. We may be a small, rural community, but we want to and need to stay in touch with the outside world.

It's time for the federal government to tune into the needs of Canadians. And Canadians need the CBC.

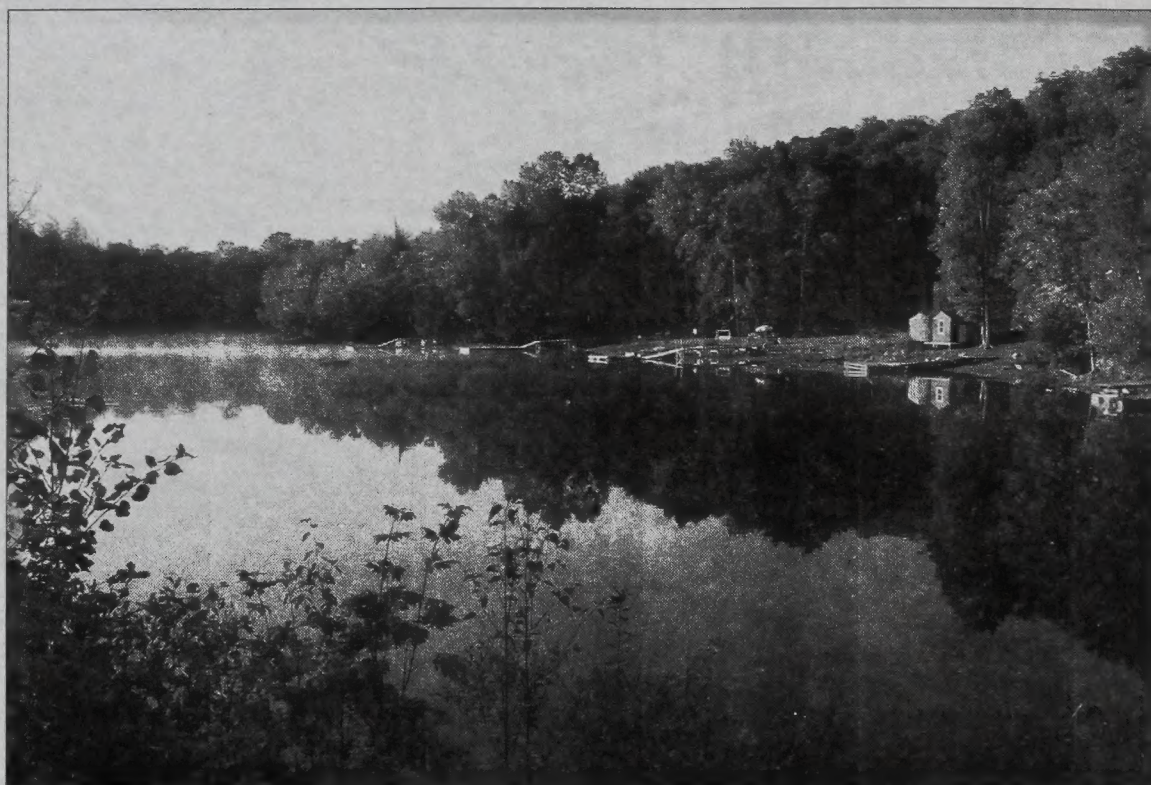

A home it deserves

In all the praise for Fleming College's laudable efforts in building a beautiful new home for the 4Cs, let's not forget how lucky we are as a county to have the 4Cs in our midst.

The 4Cs does what most of us either forget needs to be done or wants to get involved with: it takes care of people in their time of need. By operating the food bank, and raising money for the food bank through the Lily Ann clothing depot, the 4Cs is our conscience and our guardian angel.

While those who visit the food bank do so out of need, the Lily Ann attracts both those who can't afford new clothes and those who simply enjoy finding second-hand clothing bargains. In the old facility, the Lily Ann was uncomfortably crowded, with piles of clothes threatening to choke out any breathing room. The new store looks like a store. There's room for both browsers and the volunteers who sort and sell the clothes. It's nice to see the Lily Ann getting the environment it deserves. The new digs are also obviously good for business, with about four times the income from sales on Saturday than usual.

Until now, the 4Cs has never had to ask for help. The community has just always quietly pitched in with donations of money and food. But now the 4Cs has a debt; it must raise money for its share of the new building. But while thinking about doing what you can to help pay for the building, don't forget to support the 4Cs' primary role of making sure that no family has to go without a healthy meal.

Autumn comes to Esson Lake.

Paying your dues

THERE'S A POPULAR THEORY that says a sportsman evolves in phases.

First, he's trying to learn the skills of the sport, whether it be shooting, casting, or calling. Next, after gaining proficiency, he is constantly trying to harvest his daily limit of fish or game. Finally, he attains a serene acceptance that the quantity of fish or game is not nearly as important as the quality of the hunt or the beauty of the location. Many consider this the highest attainment of the hunting ethic.

To which I say nonsense.

The highest attainment is getting others to brag about what a fine sportsman you are. This is the pinnacle of any outdoors endeavour.

Naturally, it is not easy, nor is it inexpensive, but with a little persistence it can be done. And it's funny how those compliments come from those who you'd least expect them to.

Once, for instance, I saw a fishing buddy dining in a classy, out of the way, candlelit restaurant with his young and vivacious secretary. Let me tell you, in the three years preceding his divorce, he had nothing but glowing reports about my angling abilities. Every time we met, he'd jump at the chance to compliment my abilities, especially when his lovely wife was within earshot.

Oh sure, occasionally he'd slip up, but then someone in the crowd would turn the conversation to what a fine lawyer his father-in-law was and bingo, he was back to describing my fly casting with a poetic licence that made other men envious. The best part was that his father-in-law returned my compliments on occasion.

I don't think it takes a genius to see that receiving an insincere compliment from a person under duress is preferable to having to sully your own good name by telling the very same lie. It's this fine line that separates us gentlemen from the rest.

And I was telling this to my buddy Tom just the other day after we ran into each other at the sporting goods store. Tom was browsing for dog collars and I had just purchased a very expensive fly rod for my 25th wedding anniversary. The beauty of it was, my wife and I will not celebrate that anniversary for another 16 years, so I am reasonably sure that the surprise will be complete, which is great because she always telling me that she loves surprises.

In the meantime I had planned on using it a few times to "exercise the warranty." Again, this was another highly considerate thing for me to do as my wife openly admits that she hates exercise.

As I bragged about this incredibly thoughtful approach, my friend simply smiled and noted that the rod was slightly more expensive than the new couch that my wife always insists we need. He then went on to mention that he often talks in his sleep while dreaming of trout fishing and grouse hunting. Most times, he says, he only repeats interesting tidbits that he picks up during the day. But he said that this was okay since the only person to hear them was his wife who, he reminded me, happens to be a very good friend of my own dear wife.

Anyway, needless to say Tom is an excellent trout angler and one hell of a wing shot.

Apple time

WHEN JAKE RECEIVED the invitation for dinner, his heart skipped a beat. Not so much for the idea of a meal cooked by someone else - though that was very appealing. Nor was it the thought of a roast beef and mashed potatoes feast, something he had not dove into for months. No, it was the mention of fresh apple pie for dessert that set Jake's heart a flutter.

Fall was apple time. But it was also a highly evocative season for Jake because apples were linked to so many memories of his youth, some sweet, some less so. Very much like the apples whose tastes were stored in his memory like fruit in a cellar.

his early years, where time slowed down to a child's pace of long, lingering days spent in the pursuit of sensual pleasures. The rich smell of aging manure on the barnyard floor; the sun-warmed roughness of a cedar rail fence scampered over in pursuit of a butterfly; the brush of overgrown grasses as he walked through the ancient, untamed orchard.

Jake's family came to the farm in the fall more than any other season. Summers were spent at the cottage but spring and especially autumn were reserved for the old farm, with its hand pump, root cellar, and log house. And of course, the orchard. You had to walk through the orchard to reach the pond. In the spring the pond was circled by elms and fed mostly by melting snow. It had small waves dancing across its surface and red winged blackbirds called from its shore. At the same time, the orchard was awash in blossoms and of less interest to Jake than the pond. However, by September, the pond had turned to mud and on his walks in that month, Jake never got past the orchard.

Perhaps it was the twisting branches or the flocks of birds gorging themselves on fruit. Perhaps it was the different colours and shapes; the small circular Crabapples, the nubby brown Russetts, the milky red and white Snows. Or was the orchard's appeal its power to fuel Jake's imagination? For when he strolled through its tangled weeds, the ground littered with the spotted, gutted bodies the animals had savaged and then left rotting where they fell, Jake conjured so many pictures in his mind.

He thought of when the orchard was first started, the hopes that were dug into the ground along with the young trees. He pondered on harvest time, when people were the ones to pick and haul and store, reaching from the top of ladders, feeling the firm smoothness in their word-roughened hands. And he remembered the ghost stories his mother told him when he sat drinking weak tea and buttered bread in the farm kitchen; stories of a ghostly maiden wandering through the orchard, her white dress trailing behind. So many people, so many dreams, so many years passed by.

Being a child, Jake did not linger long on such thoughts. Rather they passed through his mind like clouds across the sun before he moved on to the best part. Eating the apples. Despite the spots and ever watchful for worms, he would eat his fill until his mouth felt puckered and his chin tingled from the juice. If he couldn't reach by stretching or climbing, then he'd pick through the windfall scattered about the trees. They always tasted better after a frost and a rub on his pant leg was all the cleaning required before he sank his teeth into the sun-warmed flesh. After eating his fill, he'd gather more to bring to the house, holding his shirt in front like a basket with the apples carefully arranged for the walk back.

Somehow the apples never tasted as good when they were brought to the city. His mother would put them in the fridge and eventually they usually ended up in the garbage, unwanted and uneaten. They never looked as good as the store-bought apples and eating them amidst sidewalks, traffic and streetlights seemed to change their taste, make it less appealing, even second-rate. He felt disloyal even as he rejected these old farm apples for the shiny, perfect Delicious or Spartan bought the day before.

The farm was now long gone from his life, sold when the family needed money and had to shift priorities. But to Jake, it would always be tucked away in the corner of his mind, waiting for the sight of a barrel of apples or the smell of freshly baked apple pie, to nudge its way forward into his consciousness. And when it did, he found himself smiling with remembered pleasure.

Do you wonder if Mac Hoyle's outfit was hand-knit? Mac was six when this photo was taken in 1912. He was born in Gelert and in 1930 married Flossie Iles in Carnduff, Sask. Her father was Walter Iles, whose brother, Elwood, lived in Hamilton. Flossie is 92 and lives in Saskatchewan. Our thanks to Gelert historian Gren Schrader of Oakville for sharing the photo and information.

Taxes should pay for more police

To The Editor:

It seems that crime may be on the rise in Haliburton County. Lately there seems to be a plethora of home, cottage and vehicle break ins. It's hard to find someone these days that hasn't been a victim or that doesn't know of someone who has suffered at the hands of criminals.

As I understand it the local OPP has only two officers on duty on a Saturday night. Our county is large. It can take almost two hours to drive diagonally point to point. It's not rocket science to see that the OPP needs more officers in this detachment.

I live on a waterfront property year round and pay more taxes in Haliburton than I did in my larger house in Newmarket and here I don't have street lights, garbage collection, sidewalks, curbs or any other services of consequence that would support such a high level of taxation. We all know market value assessment is a huge tax grab and everyone points the finger at MPAC while local governments happily collect the windfall.

My point is that seeing as we are getting tax fleeced whether we like it or not, should we not expect that at the very least some of that money would be invested into adequate policing before it goes off to self-interest groups, new buildings and machinery? After all being safe in your own community should be right up there with health-care in my opinion.

The karma of kindness comes back tenfold

To the Editor:

I am responding to the articles in the Echo last week about donations to a family in crisis, and the controversy it raised in response to the same family attending a costly amusement park.

Small communities are wonderful in pulling together to help people in need. Anyone facing a crisis such as an accident, sudden illness or loss, can use a meal or a few dollars to let them know they are in a caring community, whether they are poor or not. We can judge if we wish to donate, but judgement about what constitutes appropriate behavior of others is not our place.

Instead of judging people, look to yourself, because the law of karma says you will receive tenfold for everything you give, so your kindness is bound to come back to you, if you're watching for it rather than watching the actions of others.

Murray Agnew's wartime service in RCAF remembered

To the Editor:

After reading the many tributes to Murray Agnew in the September 13th issue of The Echo I thought it might be of interest to Murray's friends to add another of his accomplishments that wasn't mentioned. Murray was also a member of the Ground Observer Corps. Most folks probably didn't know of its existence, during the "Cold War", circa 1950-60s.

This was a unit made up of area residents formed by the Royal Canadian Air Force. Our job was to report all aircraft passing overhead. The time, make, altitude, direction, approximate speed, etc., was immediately telephoned to a R.C.A.F. data base in Peterborough, where each tracking was monitored on a huge table, thus keeping track of every plane in this district. Murray was in charge of the Wilberforce section. Our area included Wilberforce, Minden (Phil Graham), Norland, Coboconk, Lorneville, Fenelon Falls, etc.

As a reward for our services the RCAF personnel took us to Trenton for a tour of the air base. As I recall, the Ground Observer Corps was never disbanded, we just faded away. I have a photo of our group taken in one of the fighter plane hangers.

Vernon Le Crow, of Norland, was also saddened to hear of Murray's passing. They chummed together and boarded in the same house in Lindsay when they attended Lindsay Collegiate.

We were pleased to learn of the celebration of Murray's life to take place in October. Thanks.

John Le Crow,
Norland

Editor's note: The memorial for Murray Agnew is this Sunday afternoon at the Lloyd Watson Centre in Wilberforce.

When it comes to water, the expectations are clear.

If your drinking water is meant for public use, you must know for certain that it's safe.

Owners and operators of certain drinking water systems must now comply with the requirements outlined in Ontario's drinking water systems regulation (Reg. 252/05, June 2005).

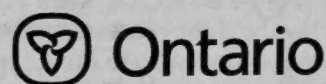

If the general public has access to your drinking water, whether it's via taps, washrooms, drinking water fountains or showers, this regulation affects you. Some establishments included are restaurants, service stations, churches, arenas and seasonal residences (such as campgrounds and communal cottage developments).

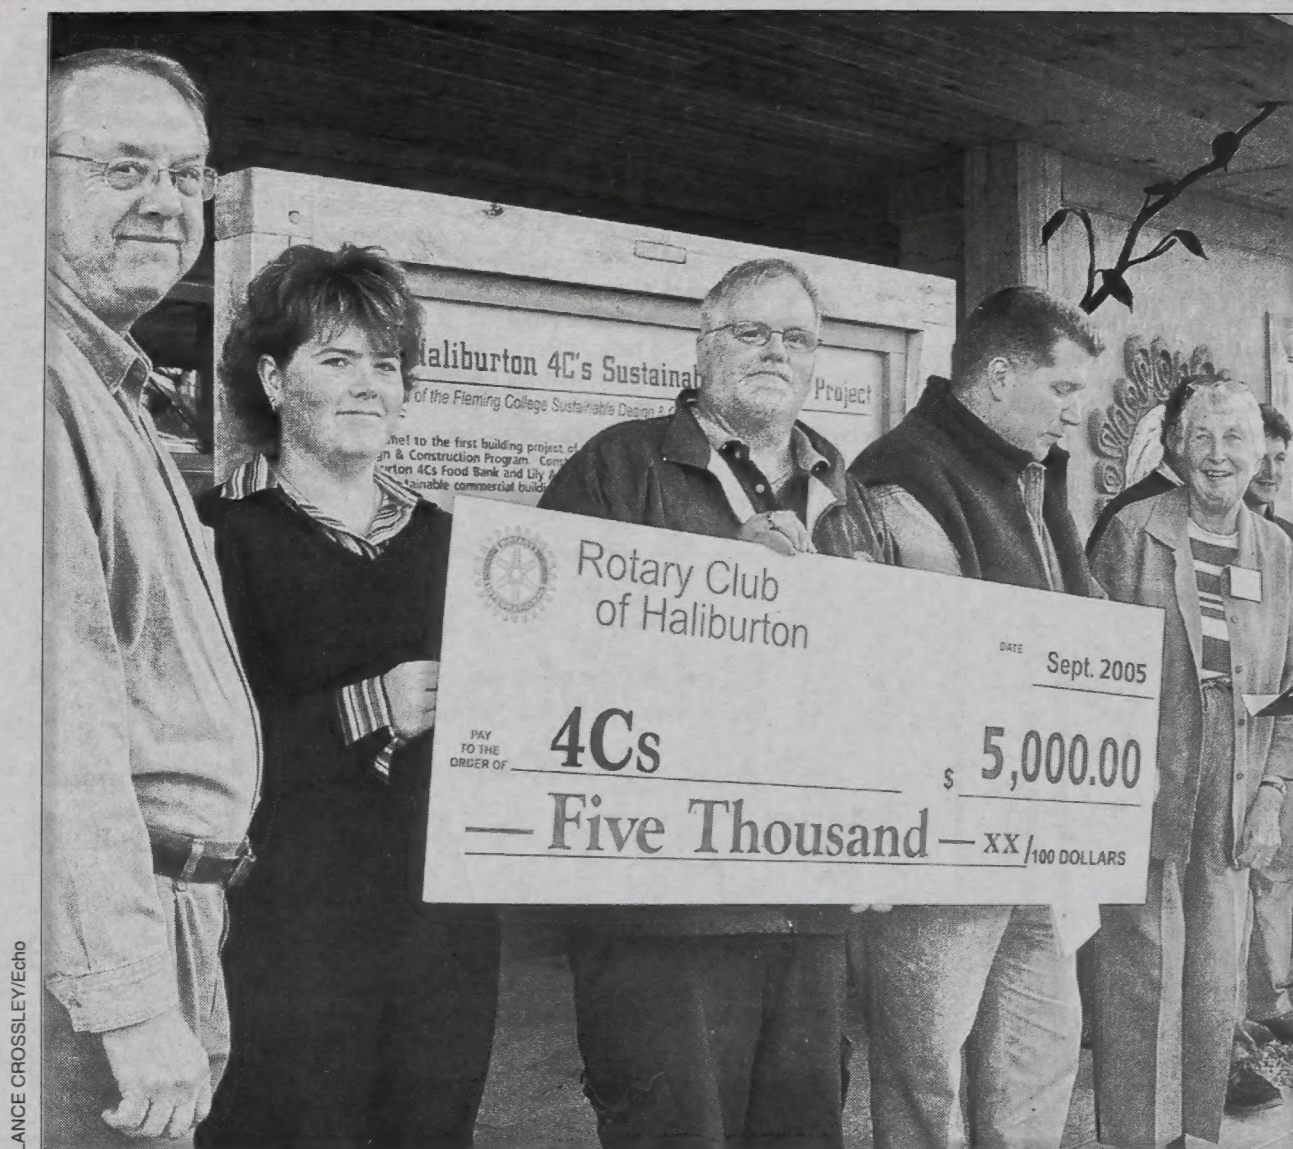

Clean, safe drinking water is vital to our health. Do your part to protect the quality of drinking water in your community.

After a few prayers and blessings from local religious leaders, Earl Cooper played bagpipes in a rendition of Amazing Grace before the official ribbon cutting. Once inside, a packed house nibbled on sandwiches, cheese, and crackers, while assessing the new digs. Other attendees browsed through the racks of clothing at the Lily Ann thrift store.

The straw bale building is the product of the Sustainable Building Design and Construction program at Fleming College's Haliburton campus and is considered a model in environmentally-friendly design. Its perimeter foundation is comprised of polypropylene sacks filled with earth and some cement, while straw and clay fill the half-metre walls. The former residence of the 4Cs is a condemned building that has no running water or washroom facilities.

Dysart Reeve Murray Fearrey and Irene Roberts-McGuire had the honour of cutting the ribbon. The township provides the building rent-free.

St. George's Anglican Church reverend Faun Harriman shares a laugh with Ave Petch as the church presented its donation.

Once in the straw bale building, some attendees took the opportunity to check out the clothing in the centre's Lily Ann thrift store.

Volunteers still needed for hockey's County League

The 2005/2006 County Hockey League is in the planning stages for the upcoming season. If you missed or haven't registered as of yet, the County League is open for girls and boys age 3-14. You may contact Rob Meyers (457-3815) or visit www.highlandstorm.org for information on registration.

The league is currently seeking volunteers to coach and assist coaches. Trainers are also required for each team this season. If you are interested, please contact me as soon as possible.

Starting day is Saturday October 1 at the Haliburton arena. Opening game day will take place on Saturday October 15.

Through the game of hockey, the County League provides an opportunity for girls and boys to develop their skills in a positive, supportive, and fun environment provided by the parents, coaches, and volunteers that comprise the league. The County League's objective is to make every player feel that she or he is an equally important and necessary part of the team. Character values such as teamwork, respect, effort, and fair play are emphasized throughout the season.

The League is both developmental and recreational. Many players go on to play rep hockey for our Storm teams after developing their skills and passion in the County League. At the same time, many players choose to continue to play within the County League where they enjoy the lighter schedule and reduced travel. County League players play and practice in either Haliburton or Minden. As well, a total of three games are scheduled in Wilberforce.

The inaugural year of the County League began in 2001/2002. It was formed after the Minden and Haliburton Hockey Associations amalgamated. Past and current executive members had the vision and foresight to create a league to attract as many players as possible to the game of hockey. Since its inception, the league has continued to increase the number of players participating within the County League.

He tried, but Matt Roberts, who played offence and defence, fails to block a tackle.

Coach Gary Brohman praised the team for a very physical game.

While his teammates block Adam Scott's offense, Jesse Johnson finds a clearing.

Seniors Red Hawks beat former COSSA champs 16-0

MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

The senior Red Hawk football team played a very physical game on Friday, with very positive results.

The team opened its 2005 season with a 16-0 win over Adam Scott Secondary School on Friday. Making the win even sweeter was the knowledge that they had beaten the school that produced last year's Central Ontario champions – in front of a boisterous home town crowd.

From the scrimmage to the defensive tackles, "we physically handled the game at a high level," says senior coach

Gary Brohman.

Adam Scott did have a touchdown but a penalty nullified it.

He says defensive tackle Dave Stewart played an excellent game and running back Kevin Cross broke the 100-yard mark. "He did a superb job," Brohman says.

The juniors also opened their season in Haliburton on Friday but they had to swallow their disappointment in losing the game on the last play. Adam Scott won the game 22-20.

"We've always got to get one bit better so that's why we practise," Brohman says.

As well as getting the whole school in a winning mood during a pre-game rally in the gym, the Red Hawks Spirit Squad also kept the home town fans entertained during half time.

Senior girls basketball team resurrects its fall season

Julie Johnson lines up a shot in Friday's opening game against Bracebridge-Muskoka Lakes. The seniors won 25-21.

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

When Nathan Johnson was in his final year at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School, it was supposed to be the time when all the skills he had learned in sports would finally be put to the test.

And then came the labour dispute between the teachers who coach the teams and the school board. The soccer season was cancelled and a basketball team was cobbled together at the last minute to try to rescue some of the season.

"I was very disappointed," says the 25-year-old Stanhope native, who has just returned home from a year of teaching in South Korea.

Remembering how he felt when his final sports year was almost cancelled, how could he say no when HHSS asked him to save the season for the senior girls' basketball team?

"I couldn't let that happen to these girls," he said a week after his first practice.

This championship team had had to abandon their aspirations when it became apparent that there was no teacher available to coach them.

Then Johnson came home and started supply teaching. When he volunteered to coach the boys junior team, word got around that he was available and Paul Morissette gave him a call, asking him to pull together a season with the senior girls team.

"I'm just there to get them motivated," he says. "A lot of them know more about basketball than I do."

The girls played their first game on Friday against Bracebridge-Muskoka Lakes Secondary School and came out on top of a 25-21 score.

"It was a scrappy game and a little bit rough but that's to be expected for the first game," Johnson said.

Kirsten Rae was the lead point-getter with six, with Julie Johnson, Sheri Walker and Natalia Rico each getting four points.

MARTHA PERKINS/Echo

Natalia Rico scores one of her points in the game at HHSS. The top goal scorer was Kirsten Rae with six points.

Life's surprising for Arctic diver

'Black pools of death' among surprising finds in Arctic waters

GRAEME STIMP

Staff Reporter

Kathleen Conlan does a lot of diving during the summer. The Kashagawigamog Lake resident not only snorkles in the weedy waters in front of her century-old cottage, but she also investigates the bottom of the Arctic sea floor.

Conlan is a marine biologist for the Canadian Museum of Nature, and since 1991 she has been studying what happens on the other end of the tip of an iceberg, the end that scrapes the seabed. "In Antarctica an iceberg can scrape up to 550m deep into the seafloor, and in the Arctic that can be as deep as 250m," says Conlan. That's some big ice!

A path of destruction is left behind after an iceberg or multi-year chunk of ice (sea water that has frozen year after year to form a very large ice cube) drags the sea floor. "The sea floor is full of life, such as clams, urchins, worms, and other neat organisms," says Conlan. "My research has been to see how quickly communities come back after they are destroyed by sea ice."

Like all communities, some life comes back quickly. Kelp and diatoms (a string of single photosynthetic cells) are the "dandelions of the sea floor" according to Conlan. "They are back within the first year, and we also find that barnacles do very well in those first five years."

Usually five years after being destroyed, the sea urchins return and eat all the diatoms, kelp, and barnacle larvae. So by the time it has been 10 years, there are no new barnacles only adults, sea urchins and the clams begin to return.

"The sea floor is so amazing because of the immense diversity of it all," says Conlan. "It is like a big patchwork quilt with some areas bare after being destroyed, some just starting new life, and some very mature areas. It's a fascinating place to study."

Fascinating because the sea always has a new surprise up its sleeve, such as the "black pools of death" found under massive pieces of ice. The ice above squeezes out very salty water that is denser than regular sea water. That dense, salty water sinks to the lowest spot, a pool, where it stays put. The salty water kills some of the organisms that lived in that pool, which are in turn eaten by scavengers. However, because the water is dense, it doesn't flow out, so the scavengers use up all the oxygen in the water, which means that any organisms that enter the black pool of death suffocate.

But, discoveries like that are just the tip of the research iceberg for Conlan. Because of the depleting oil reserves around the world, there is once again interest Beaufort Sea oil reserves. The last time there was interest was during the energy crisis and large oil companies created drilling platforms at the mouth of the Mackenzie River. These platforms were created by sucking up large amounts of sand from the sea floor and dumping it into one big pile somewhere else. When the energy crisis eased, the platform equipment was removed and the sand was bulldozed, figuring that the motion of the ocean would flatten the remaining mound.

It didn't and now oil companies want to use that sand to build new platforms. But before they do that scientists must decide whether those old island communities are unique and should be protected.

Conlan has spent the last few years studying those islands and found that they are different. They aren't as rich as the ocean seabed because they are younger, and the holes where the sand was sucked up are especially different. "The holes fill up with all kinds of debris, so it is a great place for worms to scavenge a good meal," says Conlan.

In essence, it might not be so bad for the oil companies to suck up the sand and move it, except that by moving the sand they would drop it on another richer community. Whether those communities are saved or we decide to fill our SUVs is still unclear.

And – remember those surprises – even on a different part of the Arctic Ocean Conlan found something else that intrigued her: mud volcanoes.

On the seabed floor there are huge volcanoes caused from underground methane resources. "The methane bubbles up bringing with it underground sediment, which it dumps out creating a volcano," explains Conlan.

And that's not all. Those volcanoes are great places for worms to live and some whales have adapted to eat those worms. All the whales do is grab a huge mouthful of mud and filter the mud out their mouth, leaving the worms. "It's incredible to think that an inch-long worm is enough to feed a whale, but I guess they are in a high enough concentration that it is a worthwhile way to eat," says Conlan.

With all her adventures to the North, Conlan agrees she has had a pretty interesting life.

"Working at the Museum of Nature in Ottawa has opened up a lot of opportunities for me. I can do research, help with exhibits, teach at universities, write books, whatever I want. My job has a lot of freedom, which has been the key to my travelling."

And what keeps drawing her back to the coldest parts of Canada? "It's the last real frontier; we know so little about it, so there are always more secrets to discover. And, I get to experience a culture like no other. The Inuit are very in touch with the Arctic and are very friendly to us."

A constant stream of about 20 cars filtered into Independent Gas Bar Thursday morning in light of reports that gas was rising as much as $2 per litre in parts of the province. Patrons hurried to the Independent station, which ran out of its gas supply that day, because of fears that Hurricane Rita would inflate oil prices in the way that Hurricane Katrina did a few weeks ago. The fears proved to be unfounded, as gas prices remained steady throughout the weekend.

Highlands East wants to create more disabled parking spots

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The following are brief reports of items discussed at the September 13 meeting of Highlands East council.

Businesses will be asked if they are willing to enforce a proposed "model parking" bylaw. The bylaw, which creates special parking exemptions for people with a Disabled Person Parking Permit, is one of the requirements of the Highway Traffic Act.

Council has no trouble with enforcing the bylaw on municipal lands but does not want to get into enforcing it on private lands especially since its bylaw enforcement officer does not work weekend. What if someone parked illegally at a grocery store on a Saturday? Would the municipality be expected to deal with it?

"We're looking at how we enforce our current bylaws before we want to take on any more," said Councillor Rick Forget.

The municipality has not yet passed the bylaw but Deputy-reeve Bill Howe thinks it should. Councillors agreed that Highlands East would not be responsible for enforcing the bylaw on private lands but want to get input from business owners before passing the bylaw.

Tourism booth

Forget suggested contacting business associations to ask how and if the municipality should go ahead and spend a $10,000 grant from the county to open a tourism information booth.

"They might have ideas and want to get on the bandwagon," he said.

The county is giving each municipality $10,000 to open its own tourism information booth. Reeve Keith Tallman says choosing the proper location is essential.

One option is to use the money to pay for summer staff at one or two sites.

911 hang ups

The OPP continues to be plagued by people calling 911 and then hanging up.

From January 1 to July 30, there have been 286 hang-up calls. Forty of them have come from Highlands East.

Every time 911 is called the police are obliged to respond, even if the person on the phone says it's not necessary.

"It pulls services away from other areas where we need coverage," said Forget, who's on the Community Policing Advisory Committee.

Forget says more has to be done to educate people about the proper use of 911, which was introduced in the county last December.

In other policing news, the Haliburton Highlands detachment has started having one cruiser at the Dysart community policing-office to cover shift changes. Highlands East has expressed concern that at shift changes, all cruisers are in the west of the county, creating longer response times.

Forget says Highlands East has started to get better service.

Councillor Suzanne Partridge praised the fast response time of the Bancroft OPP. She was working at a property at Baptiste Lake when construction workers accidentally set off the alarm. Three officers were there within 15 minutes. The police say there has been a high number of break-ins and they are giving them a top priority.

Severance

Council may exercise its option of turning down a severance application because it's worried about how the owner of the new property would get access in the winter.

The property is on a portion of Airport Road (formerly Town Line Road off Cty. Rd. 648.) Access would be on a particularly steep and rough hill.

"If someone's going to live there year-round it will make it hard," said roads superintendent Barry Dunford. "They'll never get up the hill in the winter."

Council will do a site inspection this week.

Gas tax

Before giving the municipality its portion of gas tax revenues, the federal government wants Highlands East to prove that the money will be spent on projects that demonstrate a contribution to environmental sustainability.

The federal government is leaning towards waste water and sewage projects but Highlands East prefers spending money on roads. It could make the argument that using the money to hardtop roads will reduce reliance on calcium chloride as a dust suppressant. Other projects could be improving water runoff from roads.

"This gas tax is not just a little freebie that we can spend the way we like," says CAO Sharon Stoughton-Craig.

Reeve Keith Tallman approved of the stringent reporting guidelines. "It's the federal government that needs checks and balances."

Ward reports

Glamorgan councillor Donna Graham says the area has been fairly quiet. Horseshoe Days did make a small profit.

Cardiff councillor Suzanne Partridge said they are dealing with issues raised at a recent Paudash Lake association meeting. Of prime concern is the cutting of trees on lots leading to water. She's very pleased with the Bancroft Chamber of Commerce's response to items raised in its recent survey.

Cemetery database

Council will send certificates to Fleming College students Shelley Watt and Sara Rayat to thank them for "all their hard work in creating a cemetery database for three of the five cemeteries of Highlands East (South Wilberforce, Essonville and Gooderham.)"

Council will also ask Fleming College to encourage students to continue work on the project next year. The McGillivray and Deer Lake cemeteries have yet to be included in the database which includes information on all the gravesites.

Salerno Lake

Council will pick up half the costs of building a new access point at Salerno Lake. Minden Hills will pay the other half.

Hazardous waste

Unable to add a second hazardous waste day in Highlands East, the municipality has agreed to take part in five such days in Bancroft between May and October. The municipality will be charged for every ratepayer who takes advantage of the opportunity.

There were 105 ratepayers who participated in the hazardous waste day in Tory Hill.

Forest plan

Partridge was upset that residents have to travel to either Peterborough or Toronto to see the proposed Bancroft Minden Forest Management Plan for 2006 to 2026. She says that since the plan affects this area, the plan should be available for review here.

The review period is from September 12 to November 11. It is conducted by the Ministry of Natural Resources to set out the long-term strategic direction for the management of Crown land forests. It also includes the details of harvest, renewal and tending operations and access road locations for 2006 to 2011.

Local men protest CBC lock-out

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

For the past six weeks, Canadians have lost one of their most important links with one another and two Highlanders are not very happy about it.

Terry Walker is an Eagle Lake cottager who has been coming up to the Highlands since the 1960s. As president of the Toronto location of the Canadian Media Guild, he now spends most of his days with fellow CBC employees who are protesting being locked out of their offices by management.

Over on Schyler's Island, Jerry MacDonald is glad to be retired. As the former executive officer of the Canadian Wire Services Guild, the predecessor of the Canadian Media Guild, he spent 35 years bargaining on behalf of CBC staff and other journalists.

"The CBC is the only link we have from coast to coast," he says. "The CBC hasn't lost its identity yet and God help us if it does."

"We are concerned about losing viewers and listeners," says Walker, "but is there anything we can do about it? Absolutely not."

Six weeks ago, the CBC locked out its 5,500 Guild employees, including the 2,500 who are based in Toronto. CBC Radio has cobbed together a morning show and short hourly newscasts, but is relying on repeats and endless runs of music to fill the other hours. CBC Television is also relying heavily on repeats.

At issue is senior management's desire to hire more contract employees, who already make up 30 per cent of the workforce. Walker believes the issue is more ideological than practical.

"The senior management has abandoned public broadcasting. They're hired guns who don't care one bit," he says.

He believes that when union members were locked out, senior management expected them to cave into management's contract demands in three weeks. Some members are taking outside jobs to help top up the strike pay, but Walker says the lockout has brought the CBC staff closer together.

"We're tighter and more united now," he says while talking on his cellphone in front of the CBC's Toronto headquarters. "I'm dumbfounded by the level of expertise, talent and skill [we have here.] Working for the CBC you don't do it for the money. You can make a lot more money, on the technical side, at other broadcasters. You do it because [the CBC] means something."

MacDonald, who retired 10 years ago, says the CBC has already tried to hire more contract workers but it didn't work out. "Contract doesn't mean cheaper, it just means they have the right to get rid of people on a whim. It's easier not to have to manage, and they've lost a lot of good managers."

MacDonald says that when he joined the CBC in 1958, "it was a wonderful place to work... Now management has turned them into bitter people who have a job."

On Thursday, the Canadian Media Guild tabled an offer of settlement with the corporation. The guild says the offer includes:

- a 60-month collective agreement with wage increases of 3.5 per cent a year and a $1,000 signing bonus for each member who has worked 60 days or more in the 12 months prior to the lockout; the bonus would be paid out of the money saved by the corporation during the lockout

- a new proposal on employment status that addresses the corporation's need for operational flexibility and improves job security and benefits, including pensions, for contract employees

- a proposal that permits contract workers who have been employed by the CBC for more than three years to convert to permanent staff

- a type of seniority for temporary employees for access to work and protection from termination before the agreed-upon end of engagement

- a layoff and recall process that preserves the seniority-based system and provides increased opportunities for many employees to retain employment during downsizing

- better rights and fees for freelance workers

- improved annual leave entitlements

- and multilingual compensation for employees who must work in two or more languages.

On the corporation's website, cbcnegotiations.ca, the corporation offers the following response:

"The CBC is disappointed with the settlement offer tabled today by the CMG. After some positive momentum over the past weeks, the CMG's offer fails to move us closer to an agreement.

"The CMG didn't propose any compromise on the two key issues - employment status/contract employees and staff reduction including demonstrated occupational qualifications. The proposal also moves us apart in five or six key areas by including additional issues never previously tabled.

"The Guild's proposal on contract employees is actually more restrictive than the current collective agreement. The union has proposed that any on-going work needs to be performed exclusively by permanent employees, which is radically different than the current reality. CBC has repeatedly told the union that there is room to negotiate on this issue, but reducing our current flexibility is not an option we can consider.

"Similarly, the CMG has not made any effort to compromise on Staff Reduction, which includes Demonstrated Occupational Qualifications (DOQ). The CMG has indicated that it is no longer interested in maintaining the concept of DOQ and wishes to change the qualifications threshold. This is troubling. The Guild is also seeking to expand bumping rights across the media lines. The Guild has also proposed that all non-permanent employees, including respected journalists, hosts and producers currently on contract, would have to leave the organization prior to any qualified permanent employee being laid-off.

"The Guild wants a 3 1/2 per cent increase in each year of the collective agreement. Considering the fiscal realities of the CBC and the ongoing pressures within the organization, this is an unreasonable demand.

"The CBC was hopeful that we were drawing closer to concluding a collective agreement. Introducing new issues at this late, and critical, juncture can only serve to delay reaching a final agreement to get CBC employees back to the work they do best - creating exceptional public broadcasting.

"Despite our disappointment, we will carefully review the document tabled and will consider proposing a counter offer. The CBC remains committed to reaching a negotiated collective agreement with the CMG and is prepared to bargain day and night to get there."

There was some good news. On Friday both sides agreed to meet with federal Labour Minister Joe Fontana on Monday.

Dillon's dogs

Pooch trainer extraordinaire has been called a saviour by frustrated dog owners

LANCE CROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

It's a pleasantly humid Thursday morning and Val Dillon is letting her four dogs run loose near a park near J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School. The dogs are chasing each other with the wild abandon one would expect dogs to exhibit on such a lovely day.

What's not so expected is what happens when Dillon firmly but without shouting gives the command to lie down. All her dogs — two border collies, a Jack Russell terrier, and a Labrador — immediately heed the command from their scattered positions all over the field.

She then calls Nike, one of her border collies, to head back to the rear of her van and to fetch the Frisbee. While the others wait patiently, Nike runs back to the van and retrieves the object. When a reporter later throws the Frisbee, all of the dogs exuberantly compete to retrieve it. When Dillon does it, she tells all the dogs to lie down, throws the Frisbee and then calls out the name of the dog she wants to recover it. The dogs obey her commands verbatim.

It's a remarkable display of control by a woman who has been a full-time dog trainer for the past five years and involved with the profession for the last 15.

"A dog will continue behaviours that it finds rewarding, whether it's negative or positive," says Dillon. "So what we should do is reward behaviours we like, and reward them a lot. When you reward a behaviour, consistently and repeatedly, the dog begins to understand."

Dillon says that dog training has moved from physical disciplining to reward-based training because the latter is more likely to foster a relationship of trust between dog and owner. An early mentor of Dillon's once told her that a dog is only 50 per cent of what you're going to get — the other 50 per cent is what you're going to put into the dog.

Val Dillon is a professional dog trainer who moved to Haliburton in April. She already has locals singing her praises for her ability to tame out-of-control dogs, like the now-reformed ones in the photographs below. Photos, Lance Crossley.

Dillon's specialty is behaviour counselling for owners with dogs that are in some way out of control.

The most common problems Dillon encounters are dogs that jump up on people, pull on the leash, or are aggressive towards other dogs. She says many behavioural problems are developed early in life when the dogs are still puppies. For example, even though it may be difficult to do, she says one of the best things to do when your pet is young is to ignore it when you walk in the door. This avoids advancing the dog's instinct to greet people by jumping up on them.

"It's learning it right from day one," says Dillon. "People often don't start to realize this until a year and a half later when it's 90 pounds jumping up on you. But it's not the dog's fault. People then try to tell the dog what it's doing wrong but you've had a year and a half of rewarding the dog for what it thinks is right."

At one time in her life, Dillon applied to the RCMP to become a dog master but abandoned the pursuit when she realized she would first have to become a police officer. She kept up with her dog-training hobby, attending workshops and studying at various dog-training schools in southwest Ontario, until it eventually became a full-time job. A couple of months ago, she moved to Haliburton from London, Ontario, and has already counselled some satisfied local clients.

"Val has been like our saviour," says Haliburton resident Mary Donovan-Wilcox, who enlisted Dillon's help for her hyperactive border collie. "The most valuable thing she taught me was to stop doing things that were making things worse. This whole dog psychology thing has really blown me away."

Heather Alloway hired Dillon to set her Norwich terrier on the right path and found that Dillon's strength is that her focus goes beyond the dog itself.

"Val watches you as well as your pet," says Alloway. "She has the ability to pick up on the interaction between you and your pet."

Instead of fighting negative habits by being adversarial, Dillon employs strategies that are affirmative. For instance, an overly aggressive dog, who crouches in a hunting position every time it sees a dog in the distance, should be given something to do other than staring at the oncoming dog and hearing his owner's disapproving grunts. Dillon advises getting the dog to sit or lie down, and to promptly reward the behaviour. This points the dog's focus elsewhere.

"This teaches the dog to mind its own business. At the same time it tells the dog that if you pay attention to your master good things will happen."

Riders with a cause

Saturday was a beautiful day for a ride as members of the Ford Employees Club discovered when they gathered at member Dan Slote's house on Pine Street. The 15 riders and six passengers collected $770 in donations for the 4Cs food bank before heading out for a ride up to Dorset and then through Algonquin Park to Wilberforce. They contributed another $330 when they vied to win an autographed NHL hockey stick donated by Walt McKechnie. This is the third year for the ride, and Slote hopes even more can be raised in the future. He chose the 4Cs as the recipient because it is entirely staffed by volunteers, so "every dollar we raise goes to the cause." Photo, Martha Perkins.

Debbie Bain (front) was honoured with a certificate of achievement for her 10 years of tireless service as a hospice volunteer. On hand to celebrate was the newly appointed chair for the central-east LHIN Foster Loucks, hospice coordinator Linda May Powers, and SIRCH president Doug Smith.

Volunteers more important than ever: Loucks

Former hospital CEO says volunteers provide a personal connection in new healthcare landscape

LANCE CROSSLEY

Staff Reporter

Former Haliburton Highlands Health Services CEO Foster Loucks was the guest speaker at last Tuesday night's meeting for SIRCH hospice volunteers. Loucks was on hand at the Haliburton hospital boardroom to talk about the government's Local Health Integration Networks and to pay tribute to Debbie Bain, who was being honoured for her 10 years of service as a hospice volunteer.

LHINs represent the government's efforts to decentralize the provincial health system by investing regional networks with the power to fund and allocate health care delivery. Loucks has been appointed to chair the central east LHIN - Haliburton County, Kawartha Lakes, Durham Region, Northumberland County, Peterborough County, as well as the eastern region of Toronto - which is the largest of 14 networks that are being set up across Ontario. The area has a population of 1.5 million people.

Loucks suggests that the new health landscape means volunteers will be more important than ever in sustaining our health system.

"The real quality of our health system can be measured in terms of how many doctors, nurses, and funded programs we have," said Loucks. "But much beyond that is the importance of volunteers and that personal connection that can be made at a community level by

Harvest time

It's a time of harvest in the Highlands. As summer turns to fall, many gardeners are busy gathering up the bounty from all that sunshine. World Youth dig in for brekkie

The group of 18 young Canadians and Kenyans participating in the Canada World Youth (CWY) program organized a breakfast at the Wintergreen Sugar Shack on Saturday.

The young adults are living with host families from the local community.

The participants organized entertaining skits to give their host "moms", "dads" and "siblings" a better understanding of the program. Besides enjoying a delicious meal of fresh pancakes and maple syrup, attendees were given a tour of the Wintergreen Sugar Shack facilities and learned the process by which the tasty maple syrup is created.

The Canada World Youth team arrived in Haliburton on September 14 and will depart on November 30. Following their stay in Ontario, they will be travelling to Kenya for another three months where they will continue to volunteer in community organizations and learn about each other's cultures.

To find out more information about the Canada World Youth program, call Mike or Kuntai at 754-3970.

people like yourselves and Debbie."

Loucks feels that the public will become increasingly aware of LHINs in the coming months. One of the LHIN's priorities will be to foster localized support programs such as Community Care and mental health services. Loucks says it recognizes that programs offered within the community are vital to a well-functioning health system.

"It may be that the balance hasn't been right," said Loucks. "One of the priorities is to see if dollars can be shifted to the community while at the same time sustain the hospital system."

Another goal is provide seamless services for seniors. Loucks says that too often seniors are left to assess their own health needs and navigate the system with their own devices. The LHINs hope to provide a one-door system that will direct the patient to the appropriate service. In this scenario, says Loucks, the left hand will know exactly what the right hand is doing.

Rural needs will also be a priority, which is one of the reasons Loucks feels he was chosen to chair the central-east network.

Debbie Bain was presented with a certificate of achievement from SIRCH President Doug Smith for her 10 years of service. Hospice volunteers such as Bain provide emotional and practical support to individuals with life-threatening illness. Hospice coordinator Linda May Powers praised Bain as a "fantastic volunteer" of exceptional warmth and caring. Bain herself was a little embarrassed by the attention and gave a simple reason for why she has volunteered for so long.

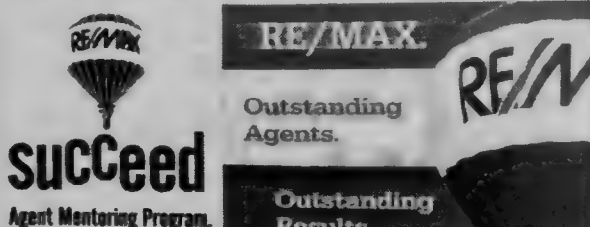

"I really love doing what I'm doing and that's why I do it," said a humble Bain.

Buy a paper angel at the checkout counters at local retail stores this October and help sustain an important healthcare program in Haliburton County.

Angels of Hope has become an annual fundraising cornerstone for SIRCH Community Hospice.

Started last year with great success, the fundraising campaign raised more than $4,000.

Everyone can help. For just $2 you can put your name or the name of a loved one on the angel, which is posted in the store window.

Community Hospice makes a difference every year to hundreds of county residents living with, dying from or bereaved by a life-threatening illness. Hospice is a concept of care, one that focuses on life not death and quality rather than quantity of life. Trained volunteers provide practical and emotional support year-round.

You can find the Hospice Angels of Hope at these participating stores from

It's back to school for Allison Kennedy after Katrina hit Biloxi

A few weeks ago we had a story about Allison Kennedy, a master's student from Haliburton who had to flee her new home in Biloxi, Mississippi the day before Hurricane Katrina hit. After spending a few weeks in Birmingham Alabama, she's now back at the University of Southern Mississippi to work on her thesis on the role fungi plays in the restoration of the shoreline. She wrote this e-mail last Tuesday.

Prized grizzly bear skin, stuck in a freezer, was rescued and towed 40 miles to Mobile and personal belongings strewn amongst the limbs. All that remains of the beautiful old beachfront homes: a staircase leading to nowhere, or a brick chimney.

Eerie.

Pines have turned red, and the Bradford pear trees are blooming, as they do under stress. Birds have returned, and frogs are popping up in unexpected places.

People here are extremely resilient. Ten per cent of staff and students (20 households out of 200) lost everything and are living in the dorm, yet I have not heard any complaining and the cleanup is really coming along.

The bayou mud and snakes that inundated our buildings first floor have been removed; we have electricity but no air conditioning.

Our molecular lab on the second floor is functional, in a blistering inferno kinda way.

On the upside, we now have a great view of the Gulf of Mexico with so many campus buildings gone. Yesterday a man with one functional arm operating a leafblower yelled to me: "Another day in paradise, eh?"

The house behind mine split in half and one half slid down a small hill. Mine suffered no damage. I feel incredibly lucky.

You can see other evidence of the 30-foot storm surge at the harbor near my place - my landlord's large trawler boat, which he was planning to live on, is now inside a monster home.

However, he was able to save his prize grizzly bear skin, which was in his freezer.

To accomplish this, he put the freezer on a trailer, drove it forty miles to Mobile, Alabama, bought a generator and hooked it up to the freezer (all on the trailer behind his Jeep) then waited six hours for gas.

Let's see what Hurricane Rita dishes out to the resourceful Gulf Coast.

Harvest time

It's a time of harvest in the Highlands. As summer turns to fall, many gardeners are busy gathering up the bounty from all that sunshine. Carol Lee had so much produce at her Vinegar Hill garden that friends such as Audrey Roberts were invited to pick their own share of fresh vegetables. Photo, Martha Perkins.

World Youth dig in for brekkie

The group of 18 young Canadians and Kenyans participating in the Canada World Youth (CWY) program organized a breakfast at the Wintergreen Sugar Shack on Saturday.

The young adults are living with host families from the local community.

The participants organized entertaining skits to give their host "moms", "dads" and "siblings" a better understanding of the program. Besides enjoying a delicious meal of fresh pancakes and maple syrup, attendees were given a tour of the Wintergreen Sugar Shack facilities and learned the process by which the tasty maple syrup is created.

The Canada World Youth team arrived in Haliburton on September 14 and will depart on November 30. Following their stay in Ontario, they will be travelling to Kenya for another three months where they will continue to volunteer in community organizations and learn about each other's cultures.

To find out more information about the Canada World Youth program, call Mike or Kuntai at 754-3970.

Debbie Bain honoured for decade of volunteer community service

people like yourselves and Debbie."

Loucks feels that the public will become increasingly aware of LHINs in the coming months. One of the LHIN's priorities will be to foster localized support programs such as Community Care and mental health services. Loucks says it recognizes that programs offered within the community are vital to a well-functioning health system.

"It may be that the balance hasn't been right," said Loucks. "One of the priorities is to see if dollars can be shifted to the community while at the same time sustain the hospital system."

Another goal is provide seamless services for seniors. Loucks says that too often seniors are left to assess their own health needs and navigate the system with their own devices. The LHINs hope to provide a one-door system that will direct the patient to the appropriate service. In this scenario, says Loucks, the left hand will know exactly what the right hand is doing.

Rural needs will also be a priority, which is one of the reasons Loucks feels he was chosen to chair the central-east network.

Debbie Bain was presented with a certificate of achievement from SIRCH President Doug Smith for her 10 years of service. Hospice volunteers such as Bain provide emotional and practical support to individuals with life-threatening illness. Hospice coordinator Linda May Powers praised Bain as a "fantastic volunteer" of exceptional warmth and caring. Bain herself was a little embarrassed by the attention and gave a simple reason for why she has volunteered for so long.

"I really love doing what I'm doing and that's why I do it," said a humble Bain.
